FOREWORD.

To the historian of social life this—the third and concluding—portion of the Leet Book proper will be of the greatest interest. It is true that, unlike its immediate predecessor, Part III has few of those vivid personal touches concerning the doings and character of the citizens, or the movements of royal folk, such as gave so distinctive a feature to the episode of Laurence Saunders or the chronicles of the Wars of the Roses.<sup>1</sup> As a set-off to this deficiency, however, local historians and philologists will be inclined to attach great value to the frequent occurrence of familiar names and of rare words, special characteristics of the formal and business-like entries of which Part III mainly consists. On the whole, therefore, the matter of this issue is so instructive that, though the manner of it is rather precise like the lawyer's than discursive like the chronicler's, this volume must be regarded as of equal, though divergent, value with that of its predecessors.

It is impossible in these few words to deal with the economic questions which beset England between 1496 and 1555. They must wait for the more ample space of the Introduction in the concluding volume. But one salient problem for the town-dweller appears with startling frequency in this volume and cannot be quite passed over—it is the adjustment of the opposing claims of the monopolist craftsman within the town and the stranger at the gate, a matter further complicated by the intrusion of the town employer and consumer.<sup>2</sup> The stranger appeared as workman, craftsman, buyer and seller, and found his liberty restricted in every capacity. As a workman, possibly residing in a neighbouring village, he competed with the native craftsman, carpenter,<sup>3</sup> weaver<sup>4</sup> and fuller<sup>5</sup>; as a buyer he came into conflict with the native purchasers of raw material, yarn,<sup>6</sup> malt,<sup>1</sup> hides<sup>2</sup> and tallow<sup>3</sup>; and as a seller with the native purveyers of victual.<sup>4</sup> The orders of Leet concerned with the making and unmaking of the craft of butchers, and with the admission and exclusion of the "Warwick" members of that calling, are among the most instructive entries later scribes have preserved for us.

Though the information we gather from these pages concerns men rather locally than nationally famous, circumstances have so combined to keep their memories fresh that the mere mention of many is a thing that adds interest to the record. Such are the names of Bond,<sup>5</sup> Ford,<sup>6</sup> Pisford,<sup>7</sup> Wheatley,<sup>8</sup> who, from the permanence of their charitable foundations—associated as they are with Tudor buildings of rare beauty—have gained at least a local immortality; while the memories of Wade,<sup>9</sup> Nethermyll,<sup>10</sup> Swyllyngton,<sup>11</sup> are likewise recalled by tomb or effigy in S. Michael's. The names of William Hopkyns,<sup>12</sup> Richard Sewall,<sup>13</sup> Edward Dampote<sup>14</sup>—or Davenport—strike a familiar chord by reason of our acquaintance with the doings of their better-known collaterals or descendants, a remark applying with particular propriety to William Shelley,<sup>15</sup>—not a Coventry man though he served as recorder of the city—whose family a later scion has made famous all over the world.

Another recorder sprang from the historic Warwickshire line of Throckmorton<sup>16</sup>; another, Antony Fitzherberde—or Fitzherbert<sup>17</sup>—a relative of the Willoughbys of Middleton, was famous as a legal writer; while a third, also with local connections, Edward Saunders,<sup>18</sup> is mentioned in the pages of the martyrologist, Foxe, and gains, through his brother Laurence, a certain interest. The author of the Acts and Monuments of Martyrs, whose wife's father and early patron was one Randall<sup>19</sup> of Coventry, refers also to other citizens, Christopher Waren<sup>20</sup>—or Warren—and Thomas Ryley,<sup>21</sup> in connection with Glover, the martyr, and to Richard Hopkyns.<sup>22</sup>

THE BENEDICTINES' CHAPTER.

About July 2
the black monks hold a chapter here and go on

<sup>3</sup> This 3ere the Chaptur of blak monkes was kept at Couentre aboute þe visitacion of our Lady. And many of them cam on the Seturday at nyght, & some on þe Morowe & taried there vnto Wensday; at which day they had a general procession. And they came forth at þe south durre in þe Mynstere & toke their wey thurgh the newe bilyng downe þe Bailly-lane. And the Maire & his Brethern in their scarlet Clokes with all the Craftes in their best araye stode vnder þe Elme in Seynt Mighelles Chirchyard. <sup>1</sup> This term seems to refer to iron from the Forest of Dean (see Fell, Early Iron Industry of Furness, pp. 232-3), and not as Rogers supposed to Sussex iron (see Agric. and Prices, v. 479). Yarrenton (England's Improvement by Sea and Land) speaks (1677) enthusiastically of "our forest iron," in which term he may include possibly that of Clay Hill in Shropshire, ib. p. 127. He also notes the fact that the Coldshore iron from Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire and Derbyshire, which differed from Dean iron, was better fitted for the manufacture of nails and small commodities, ib. p. 58, 147.

<sup>2</sup> This mayor must have had Protestant leanings, as he sent to warn John Glover of his intended arrest. John escaped, but his brother Robert—the martyr—was taken. On the other hand, Christopher Waren, at whose house the captive Duke of Suffolk lodged, was a Catholic partisan. Foxe, Martyrs, VII. 393.

<sup>3</sup> Probably of the Hopkins' family of Palace Yard, Coventry. The sheriff was imprisoned this year in the Fleet, being "accused," says Foxe, "of matter pertaining to religion." He appears to have sent to a thief in prison, ready to be hanged, "a certain English book of Scripture for his spiritual comfort." After his release from prison he and his family went to Basle, where he lived until after Mary's death, being "a comfortable reliever of other English exiles."
